FOREWORD

Virtually every exhibition of recent American Art of any consequence for the past decade or more has included works by RICHARD ANUSZKIEWICZ, unless of course the theme or subject of the exhibition excluded his directions. He contributed significantly to such landmark documentary efforts as the celebrated "Responsive Eye" exhibit of the Museum of Modern Art in 1965. His works have been prominent in such surveys as the "Carnegie International," (1967, 1970 Pittsburgh), "American Art Today," (1964 New York World's Fair) the 1967, 1970 Whitney Museum Annuals and the 1967 "American Painting Now" exhibited at the American Pavilion at "Expo" in Montreal, to name but a few

His work has been analyzed as formalist, structuralist, as retinal, experimental and as Geometric Abstraction. It has been described as Abstract Trompe l'Oeil and as a manifestation of the classic spirit in our time. His work has been the subject of numerous articles and included in several important books. In short, RICHARD ANUSZKIEWICZ's art, though he is yet a very young man, already stands as one of the outstanding accomplishments of recent years.

His teacher Josef Albers has said, "Art happens, not between the object and the eye, but between the eye and the mind." This truth will be abundantly clear to those who open their minds to his art.

Director, Jacksonville Art Museum
